8 THINGS TO KNOW

Astronomers reveal first image of a black hole

"Science fiction has become science fact," said co-discoverer Avery Broderick.

Black hole

EVENT HORIZON TELESCOPE COLLABORATION

Scientists on Wednesday revealed the first image ever made of a black hole, depicting a fiery ring of gravity-twisted light swirling around the edge of the abyss.

The picture, assembled from data gathered by eight radio telescopes around the world, shows the hot, shadowy lip of a supermassive black hole, one of the light-sucking monsters of the universe theorized by Einstein more than a century ago and confirmed by observations for decades. It is along this edge that light bends around itself in a cosmic funhouse effect.

"We have seen what we thought was unseeable. We have seen and taken a picture of a black hole," Sheperd Doeleman of Harvard, leader of a team of about 200 scientists from 20 countries, announced as the colorized orange-and-black picture was unveiled.

University of Waterloo physicist Avery Broderick, a co-discoverer, declared: "Science fiction has become science fact."

In fact, Jessica Dempsey, a co-discoverer and deputy director of the East Asian Observatory in Hawaii, said the fiery circle reminded her of the flaming Eye of Sauron from the "Lord of the Rings" trilogy.

Unlike smaller black holes that come from collapsed stars, supermassive black holes are mysterious in origin. Situated at the center of most galaxies, including ours, they are so dense that nothing, not even light, can escape their gravitational pull. This one's "event horizon" — the precipice, or point of no return, where light and matter begin to fall inexorably into the hole — is as big as our entire solar system.

Three years ago, scientists using an extraordinarily sensitive observing system heard the sound of two much smaller black holes merging to create a gravitational wave, as Albert Einstein predicted. The new image, published in the Astrophysical Journal Letters and announced around the world, adds light to that sound.

Outside scientists suggested the achievement could be worthy of a Nobel Prize, just like the gravitational wave discovery.

"I think it looks very convincing," said Andrea Ghez, director of the UCLA Galactic Center Group, who wasn't part of the discovery team.

The image helps confirm Einstein's general theory of relativity. Einstein a century ago even predicted the symmetrical shape that scientists just found.

The picture was made with equipment that detects wavelengths that can't be seen by the human eye, so astronomers added color to convey the ferocious heat of the gas and dust, glowing at a temperature of perhaps millions of degrees. But if a person were to somehow get close to this black hole, it might not look quite like that, astronomers said.

The black hole is about six billion times the mass of our sun and is in a galaxy called M87 that is about 53 million light-years from Earth. One light-year is 5.9 trillion miles, or 9.5 trillion kilometers.

Black holes are the "most extreme environment in the known universe," Broderick said, a violent, churning place of "gravity run amok."

"We have seen what we thought was unseeable. We have seen and taken a picture of a black hole."
Sheperd Doeleman, a Harvard scientist

While much of the matter around a black hole gets sucked into the vortex, never to be seen again, the new picture captures gas and dust that are lucky to be circling just far enough to be safe and to be seen millions of years later on Earth.

A black hole's gravity creates a funhouse effect where you can see light from both behind the black hole and behind you as the light curves and circles around the black hole.

Despite decades of study, there are a few people who deny black holes exist, and this work shows that they do, said Boston University astronomer professor Alan Marscher, a co-discoverer.

The project cost $50 million to $60 million, with $28 million of that coming from the National Science Foundation. The same team has gathered even more data on a black hole in the center of our galaxy, but scientists said the object is so jumpy they don't have a good picture yet.

Myth says a black hole would rip you apart, but scientists said that because of the particular forces exerted by an object as big as the one they documented, someone could fall into it and not be torn to pieces. But the person would never be heard from or seen again.

Black holes are "like the walls of a prison. Once you cross it, you will never be able to get out and you will never be able to communicate," said astronomer Avi Loeb, who is director of the Black Hole Initiative at Harvard but was not involved in the discovery. ASSOCIATED PRESS

Judge orders former Penn St. president Spanier to jail

2 A judge is giving former Penn State president Graham Spanier three weeks to report to jail and start serving a sentence imposed over his handling of a complaint about Jerry Sandusky showering with a boy. Court officials on Wednesday released an order from Judge John Boccabella that says Spanier can do his time in the jail near his home in State College if county jail wardens approve. Spanier has remained out on bail after his 2017 conviction for misdemeanor child endangerment. Spanier was forced out as university president in 2011, after Sandusky was charged with child molestation.The 70-year-old Spanier was sentenced to a minimum of two months in jail and two months of house arrest. The judge is also giving his approval to Spanier's participation in a work-release program. ASSOCIATED PRESS

Minnesota arrests 58 in child sex sting operation

3 Minnesota authorities arrested 58 people accused of attempting to solicit children for sex or for trafficking in a sting operation staged during the NCAA Final Four basketball tournament, state authorities said on Wednesday. The sting, which resulted in the rescue of 28 victims, including one minor, occurred Friday through Monday as undercover agents posed as minors or as sex buyers and chatted with suspects on social media platforms. Investigators arrested the suspects as they arrived at an arranged meeting place for an encounter, the Minnesota Department of Public Safety said in a statement. The people arrested were not part of a single sex-trafficking ring, Jill Oliveira, a spokeswoman for the Bureau of Criminal Apprehension with the Department of Public Safety, said. REUTERS

Mistrial declared for man who snapped $4.5M statue's thumb

Posing next to a Cinese terracotta statue known as "The Cavalryman," Michael Rohana broke and stole the appendage.

A jury was unable to reach a verdict in the trial of a Delaware man who admitted he broke a thumb off a $4.5 million statue at a Philadelphia museum.

Michael Rohana was attending a Christmas-themed ugly sweater party at the Franklin Institute in December 2017 when he entered a closed exhibit of ancient Chinese terra cotta warrior statues. Authorities said Rohana, 25, took photos while posing next to a statue known as "The Cavalryman," then removed the valuable relic's left thumb and made off with it. The incident was captured by surveillance cameras.

The vandalism outraged Chinese officials.

Though Rohana didn't deny he snapped off the digit and took it home, a jury deadlocked Tuesday on charges of theft and concealment of an object of cultural heritage, The Philadelphia Inquirer reported. Rohana's lawyers argued he wasn't charged under the right law.

"Every time I see this video now, I'm trying to figure out, 'What was going through your mind? What were you thinking?' I don't know how I could have been so stupid."

Michael Rohana

"These charges were made for art thieves — think like 'Ocean's Eleven' or 'Mission: Impossible,'" federal public defender Catherine C. Henry said in closing arguments. Rohana "wasn't in ninja clothing sneaking around the museum. He was a drunk kid in a bright green ugly Christmas sweater."

Rohana, a shoe salesman who lives with his parents, told jurors it was a dumb mistake.

"I don't know why I broke it," he testified. "It didn't just happen, but there was never a thought of, 'I should break this.'" He added: "Every time I see this video now, I'm trying to figure out, 'What was going through your mind? What were you thinking?' I don't know how I could have been so stupid."

A mistrial was declared. Federal prosecutors said they'll decide by May whether to retry the case.

The thumb was returned to China. Franklin Institute officials told the jury it has not been reattached.

Victims of Pittsburgh synagogue massacre honored in Capitol

Pennsylvania lawmakers came together for an unusual joint session to commemorate the victims.

Offering prayers and making speeches, Pennsylvania lawmakers came together in an unusual joint session Wednesday to commemorate the victims of the Pittsburgh synagogue attack that killed 11 people last year.

The service was held a day after the Pittsburgh mayor signed new gun control measures that were introduced weeks after the attack. The legislation was immediately challenged in court by gun rights advocates who argued municipalities may not impose firearms regulations that go beyond what state law allows.

Attending Wednesday's event were members of the House and Senate along with members of the three congregations victimized in the Oct. 27 shooting at the Tree of Life.

"A dark and despicable act inspired thousands to reach out and find ways to lift up their grieving and terrified neighbors," Gov. Tom Wolf said in a statement earlier Wednesday.

A truck driver named Robert Bowers, 46, of Baldwin, Pennsylvania, has pleaded not guilty to charges that could bring the death penalty, though his lawyer said last month she hopes the case will be resolved without a trial.

Authorities say Bowers expressed hatred of Jews during the rampage, which also wounded seven people, and subsequently told investigators "all these Jews need to die." Investigators have said he posted online criticism of a Jewish charity that helps immigrants, saying it "likes to bring invaders that kill our people."

Lawmakers have introduced identical resolutions that highlight the history of the Jewish community in Pittsburgh and remember the victims individually. They establish April 10 as Stronger Than Hate Day in Pennsylvania.

"In the painful aftermath of the attack, the singular phrase that arose from the heartbroken city of Pittsburgh became 'Stronger Than Hate,'" the resolutions said. "The General Assembly thanks the first responders, rabbis, staff, lay leadership and hundreds of members of these synagogues who helped their family and friends."

Attendees included Dor Hadash Rabbi Cheryl Klein and New Light Rabbi Jonathan Perlman, whose congregations were victimized in the attack.

"We owe a debt of gratitude to all those who chose love over hate."

Frances Wolf

Wolf, who also attended, said the shooting continues to haunt him and his wife, Frances Wolf.

"But we continue to be inspired by the ways in which the people of Pittsburgh came and stood together in the face of hatred and violence," he said in the statement. "We owe a debt of gratitude to all those who chose love over hate."

Officials said it appears that the only other time state lawmakers from both chambers came together in a joint session over a tragedy occurred two weeks after the Sept. 11, 2001, terrorist attacks.

State Rep. Dan Frankel, whose district includes the site of the attack, said he wanted the Legislature to do more than his remarks on the House floor in early November, but it would not have been appropriate in the immediate aftermath to ask actively grieving people to come to Harrisburg. The Legislature was dormant through December, and the joint session was scheduled to accommodate other massacre-related events in Pittsburgh as well as the lawmakers' session schedule, Frankel said.

'Life-threatening' blizzard bears down on north-central US

As much as 30 inches of snow is projected.

SOCIAL MEDIA

A powerful April blizzard threatened the north-central part of the United States on Wednesday, as it pushed east across the Rockies and into the Plains states, raising the threat of more flooding in areas still recovering from a deluge last month.

Warm spring temperatures will give way to heavy snow, gale-force winds and life-threatening conditions across a swath of the central United States running from Colorado to Minnesota over the next two days, the National Weather Service said.

"This is potentially a life-threatening storm," said Patrick Burke, a meteorologist with the NWS Weather Prediction Center in Maryland.

In March, a late-winter "bomb cyclone" triggered heavy rainfall over the region and combined with melting snow to cause extensive flooding along the Missouri River and its tributaries. The deluge resulted in more than $3 billion in damage to property and crops in Nebraska and Iowa alone.

This week's storm is bringing huge swings in air temperature to Colorado. Temperatures in the state capital of Denver reached 85 degrees on Tuesday, but dropped down to 35 on Wednesday and were expected to be 21 by nighttime, forecasters said.

"This is potentially a life- threatening storm."

Patrick Burke, meteorologist

The slow-moving storm is set to bring heavy, wet snow across the region. Residents could expect downed trees, widespread power outages and road closures, Burke said. Driving is likely to be treacherous, he said.

Some areas of western Minnesota and southeast South Dakota could see as much as 30 inches of snow.

South Dakota Gov. Kristi Noem on Wednesday closed state government offices in 52 counties under a blizzard warning, according to a statement from her office. Residents were urged to stay home and avoid travel unless necessary.

Two factors may limit the flooding, forecasters said. The ground has thawed in most areas since last month, allowing for better absorption than during the aftermath of the March storm. In addition, precipitation this time is expected to be in the form of snow rather than rain, slowing the runoff process. REUTERS

Why therapy is so important for teens

PHIIRST

ASK PHIIRST:

Whether you're partnered or single, investing in your mental health doesn't have to be a solo journey. No one knows this better than the Philadelphia Institute for Individual, Relational & Sex Therapy (PhIIRST). At the end of the day, it's all about braving life's challenges so that you can be your best self.

Few periods of life are quite as tumultuous as our teen years. This is precisely why therapy can be such a positive tool in helping kids find their way through this tricky time. Metro connected with PhIIRST's Anna Stewart, MFT to unpack the many benefits of teen therapy.

Are many teens open to the idea of therapy?

One of my goals as a therapist is normalizing mental health care. When working with teens, this involves encouraging the entire family to support the therapy process. It's important that parents model treating mental health care the same as we treat preventative physical health care. Still, people often think that if they go see a therapist, it's equivalent to going to the emergency room in that it feels like a big deal. I find that a lot of people who come in to my office feel shame and embarrassment related to being in therapy. That can be a real barrier to seeking treatment. We have a long way to go in terms of making therapy a normal, natural part of growing up, and I'm trying to do my part.

What kinds of issues do a lot of teens face?

Teens face increasing pressure as they mature from many contexts such as school, parents, friends, romances and extracurriculars. They are required to navigate all of these spheres, and all the while their bodies and brains are growing and changing. It's a lot to manage.

With the advent of social media, there is a new challenge of curating a social media presence that constantly needs to be maintained. This is a tricky part of growing up today within family relationships as parents can feel unsure of how to manage their child's access to social media platforms. The digital age has highlighted the generational gap between parent and child now more than ever before.

Is it common to feel stress around sexuality and gender?

Growing up is hard enough, but it can be made even harder if a teen is questioning their experience of sexuality or gender. I'm so glad there's more visibility and acceptance for LGBTQ teens, however, with increased visibility also comes an increased possibility of bullying. The increased likelihood of death by suicide for LGBTQ individuals is particularly troubling, and a good reason for parents to emphasize the need for therapy for their teens. This applies not just to LGBTQ individuals, but also those of any minority group who face discrimination.

Any tips for parents?

I think the best thing a parent can do is really tune into their child's needs. It's easy to think we always know what's best for our child, and a lot of times that's probably true, but it's also important to meet your child where they're at in this moment and let them know you're there for them. That's why therapy can be so important for a young teen. It's also a safe space where they can just feel free to say whatever they want to say.

What makes PhIIRST uniquely qualified to treat teens?

At PhIIRST, we strive to create an inclusive and welcoming atmosphere where teens can feel safe to explore who they are on their own terms; a place where individuals and families can come together and be heard.

PhIIRST is a warm, positive space for teens of all backgrounds to seek therapy. They have locations in Center City and Media, Pennsylvania. PhIIRST's team of experts is dedicated to helping you work through it all and live your best life. Visit www.phiirst.com to learn more.

Trump says only one person is in charge of immigration: Him

Trump named Kevin McAleenan to replace Kirstjen Nielsen as Homeland secretary.

President Donald Trump says there's only one person in charge of his immigration policy: Him.

Asked by reporters Wednesday whether he had considered tapping his influential aide, Stephen Miller, to lead the Department of Homeland Security given Miller's focus on the issue, Trump was ready with praise — but not a promotion.

"Stephen is an excellent guy. He's wonderful person. ... He's a brilliant man," Trump said as he departed for Texas. But "frankly, there's only one person that's running it," Trump said. "You know who that is? It's me."

"... frankly, there's only one person that's running it. You know who that is? It's me."
President Trump

Trump on Sunday announced that Kevin McAleenan, the commissioner of United States Customs and Border Protection, would be taking over as acting Homeland Security secretary in the wake of Kirstjen Nielsen's sudden departure.

Asked whether he was considering nominating McAleenan as his permanent secretary, Trump said, "Could happen."

"We have others, but right now he's the man," said Trump.

Trump continued his focus on immigration during his Texas visit, where he turned a pre-fundraiser roundtable with supporters in San Antonio, Texas, into a forum for venting about illegal immigration, human trafficking and safety concerns on the border.

During the session, Trump announced he would be directing additional members of the military to the border and contended that residents of border states are living in tremendous danger and that nobody has any idea how bad the problem is. Some ranchers, he claimed, had told him they were finding scores of dead bodies on their land.

"They're dying on their fields, all over," he said. "They go over, they find bodies lying over the field, including many pregnant women. Many pregnant women. They give it a little water, go out and start walking. Walk to Dallas and Dallas is 250 miles away."

The comments came a day after Trump said he was not looking to revive the much-criticized practice of separating migrant children from their families at the southern border, as he has privately threatened, amid bipartisan pushback to his shake-up at Homeland Security. At the same time, he suggested the policy had worked to deter migrants from coming into the U.S., although he offered no evidence to support his position.

Last summer the administration separated more than 2,500 children from their families before international outrage forced Trump to halt the practice and a judge ordered them reunited.

"We're not looking to do that," Trump told reporters Tuesday before meeting with Egypt's president at the White House. But he also noted: "Once you don't have it, that's why you see many more people coming. They're coming like it's a picnic, because let's go to Disneyland."

The potential reinstatement of one of the most divisive practices of Trump's tenure was just one aspect of the upheaval at the Department of Homeland Security this week that culminated with Nielsen's resignation. Acting Deputy Secretary Claire Grady, a 28-year civil servant, technically next in line for secretary, was forced to resign Tuesday to make room for Trump's pick to replace Nielsen, according to two people familiar with the decision.

At least 1 dead, 17 injured in North Carolina gas explosion

A gas explosion that partially collapsed a North Carolina building and set it ablaze Wednesday morning killed one person and injured more than a dozen others, police said.

Police cars blocked the streets near the explosion in downtown Durham and a thick, acrid smoke hung over the shopping district created from remodeled tobacco warehouses. At least two ladder trucks sprayed blasts of water into the smoldering rubble nearly two hours after the explosion.

Durham Police Department spokesman Wil Glenn said a contractor boring under a sidewalk hit a 2-inch gas line, triggering the explosion. One person was killed and 15 were taken to area hospitals, Glenn said at a news conference.

A Durham firefighter and a Dominion Energy employee were among the injured, police spokeswoman Kammie Michael said in a news release. Information on their conditions was not available.

Jim Rogalski, 58, was working in his office across the street from the destroyed building when the explosion blew out the windows. At least four people working in cubicles along those windows suffered deep cuts, bloody head wounds and other injuries, he said.

"There was lots of screaming," Rogalski said. "It was pretty frantic there for a little bit until help showed up."

Rogalski was seated one row away from the windows and wasn't hurt.

"It was terrifying," he said. "The whole building shook. Things started falling — ceiling tiles, and structure and glass and debris. Lots and lots of dust. It was tough to see beyond 20 feet or so."

The explosion came about 15 minutes after the office's human resources manager sent an email warning that the city's fire department was investigating the smell of gas and that workers shouldn't leave the building through the front door, he said as a friend gave him a ride home to Chapel Hill. Rogalski said he was forced to abandon his car in a nearby parking deck because authorities worried the blast may have weakened the structure.

Blocks away, the blast shattered windows and blew at least one door off its hinges in the Brightleaf shopping district. Ed Rains was on a nearby street and couldn't see the blast but heard it. "I thought someone had dropped a dumpster on the street," he said.

Tracy Telenko was at his desk in his third-floor office when he heard the explosion and saw black smoke billowing up.

"My first thought, because there was construction going on around my building, was something fell, somebody doing construction dropped something," he said.

At nearby Durham School of the Arts, students were evacuated and classes dismissed for the day. Al Donaldson, a teacher, was walking through a hallway in a building about two blocks from the blast when he heard a loud noise, which concerned faculty and students.

"We didn't know the origin at the time," he said. "I was in the hallway, so I didn't so much feel it shake as experiencing a jarring sound."

The collapsed building is occupied by Prescient Co., which said in July 2017 that it was moving its headquarters from Arvada, Colorado, and expected to employ about 60 executives, engineering and sales workers in Durham. The company uses specialized software to design and build precise materials that allow builders to assemble multi-story apartments, hotels and other commercial buildings faster and cheaper. New "Hellboy" is darker and more violent' DAVID HARBOUR

Eleven years after the premiere of "Hellboy II: The Golden Army," the demon and antihero returns to movie theaters with a completely revamped saga. This time it is directed by Neil Marshall and stars David Harbour, whom we know as police chief Jim Hopper of the Netflix series "Stranger Things." Harbour chatted with Metro about how much he enjoyed playing Hellboy.

DANIEL CASILLAS MWN

How do you feel about being a superhero?

I feel like this one is cool. I don't feel all superheroes have my back, but this guy is very complicated. He's got issues, he's an outcast, kind of a weirdo. I can't even tell if he is doing the right thing or not, so it's a lot of fun to play him.

Did you do any physical preparation to play Hellboy?

Yeah! I did a lot of training with [New York City-based trainer] Don Saladino — he is great. We did a lot of working out, a lot of heavy weightlifting and powerlifting. I wanted to get very strong and wanted to feel what that was like. This is not my particular body [points at "Hellboy" image]; that's a prosthetic. But I did want to feel that power, and it was interesting. I think our bodies affect us so much, they affect our mind-set so much. And there is a kind of brutality of living that way, lifting this heavy weight, testosterone. … Chemically that almost happened to me.

Tell us more about the makeup process. Was it difficult?

Yes, it was initially. But then it started to get really fun. Like I started to … fetishize and get really excited about getting into the makeup chair. It started out as three hours in a chair in the morning. It was hard, hellish. And then as the shooting went on I started to miss his face, and in the morning I wouldn't feel complete. So I go in and I put on the face and the whole thing, and I look in the mirror after I was done—and I feel that I was myself again.

Why should "Hellboy" fans watch this film?

Because it's "Hellboy"! It is a superfun movie, it's dark, it's violent. Hellboy is younger and kind of more angsty I would say. And it has, of course, differences from the comic. We play with certain relationships, and certain ideas … differently. … If you are fan of the comics, I would say that it is very fun to watch. It's just a really fun movie. If you are fan of "Hellboy," you have go to see it. And even if you are not, if you know nothing about "Hellboy" — it's a fun and exciting movie. I really enjoyed it.

It's almost bikini season and it seems like everyone is on a mission to get their beach body ready.

However, working out doesn't always come easy for everyone. Some people don't know what workout gets the best results for their body, some are too nervous to branch out from their old routine and some people simply just don't know even where to start. That's where SLT comes in. The new fitness craze has taken over on the East Coast, and once you attend a class you see why.

The website itself states it's as if cardio, strength training and Pilates had a baby, so in short, this workout gives you everything you need in one session.

SLT was founded in 2011 by fitness and wellness entrepreneur Amanda Freeman. Freeman wanted a workout that provided results, was efficient and also fun. With the use of the Megaformer (think a workout machine on steroids), Freeman got what she wanted.

SLT's main mission is to give their clients the full-body results they have always wanted in a smart, efficient and effective workout. Each class at SLT helps work out every inch of your body by strengthening your core, lengthening your limits and toning your muscles. SLT is able to do this insanely effective workout with the Megaformer machine, the machine may look complicated, but once your trainer or class instructor gets you going, the workout is simple.

this studio slower = harder. According to their official website, slow and controlled movements have many benefits. They maximize the effort required for both directions of a movement (push and pull, in and out) by removing momentum from the equation. Slow movements also get you to muscle failure (a good thing) faster, leading to more defined muscle development and increased stamina.

The workout also works with slow-twitch muscle fibers to enable long-endurance feats. All of the movements help kickstart fat loss and increase the build-up of longer, leaner muscles. The Megaformer machine used with SLT works its magic with counter-resistance with its springs and weight of the carriage providing the perfect opportunity to improve muscular strength.

With all of the science aside, SLT truly does provide a fun, unique and high energy workout that actually works into each class. It's always a little nerve-wracking to join a gym, yet alone try out a new workout class- but SLT is the perfect space to step outside of your comfort zone and dive into a workout that you might actually love. On the flip side, if you're already an athlete, SLT is the perfect opportunity to try something new and get the results you already work so hard for.

The best part of it all? SLT also recently opened up their private studio for extra special and extra personal workout sessions. Feel free to bring a friend and experience everything the private sessions at SLT have to offer.

So if you're just starting out or you want to improve your fitness levels, head to SLT to truly strengthen, lengthen and tone.

The spy and the lord

Alistair Petrie gave Metro the scoop on his roles in "Deep State" season 2 and "Hellboy."

MOLLY GIVEN
Molly.Given@metro.us

Alistair Petrie is having quite the exciting year. On one end of the spectrum his infamously loved character, George White from "Deep State" will be getting a second chance at life, and on the other end, he is transforming into a powerful lord who works side by side with one of the most famous comic book characters of all time in the new "Hellboy" reboot. Petrie sat down with Metro to chat about "Deep State" season 2 (out April 28), the new "Hellboy" film (out April 12) and what to expect overall from both of his vividly distinct characters.

George White is quite a polarizing character, how would you describe him? Do you consider him a villain?

It's funny, one sort of talks about who's good and who's bad- I think the interesting stuff for me lies in the gray sort of matter in the middle of that. I think my job as an actor is to find the human being really, and then put that human being under this sort of contextual pressure of the piece. I mean there's no question he does some bad things, I think he believes in the great mantra of the so-called greater good and then finds himself disappearing down that rabbit hole trying to sort of answer the question of are you doing this for the greater good? I think he finds evermore rather depressing ways of answering that positively. Until he sort of crosses the line — he doesn't really understand or know where that line is, he ultimately comes to realize I think that he's crossed it though. But by that time it's a bit too late. What I think intrigued me about him was when we got to see him for a brief time with his family, because it's very easy to just throw on a suit and tie and curl your top lip and invite an audience to hate you for it.

Alistair Petrie plays George White in "Deep State" GETTY IMAGES

What's in store for George in "Deep State" season 2?

Well, thankfully that was our writer's big challenge — how on earth to bring him back. I always knew it was potentially a one season deal. But I was very keen to work on the show so I was very happy about that- at least to be a part of it at all, let alone multiple seasons with a real story arc. So effectively the show takes place two years before season 1 and concurrently six months afterward, so you could sort of argue it's a semi-origin story — how George White got to the point of where he is in season 1. It's really an extraordinary thing to have to play, because in many ways you're literally going back in time and in season 2, I don't get to play anything beyond what I did in season 1 because I died. So it's sort of a rediscovery somewhat and I was sort of nervous about thinking who is this man that I sort of established? But actually, it was kind of liberating in a way because you're playing someone who hasn't done any of these things from season 1, it's kind of an odd thing to do — normally it never works out that way. That was the fun of it, really. He hooks up with Walter Goggins' character, and they go on what might be termed as an escapade into Mali and that hangs half of the story in season 2.

Would you suggest watching season 1 of "Deep State" before watching season 2?

Actually, I'd argue it's not essential, partly because Mark Strong's storyline in season 1 is wrapped up. So I think you can come to season 2 fresh and start it as a stand-alone piece on its own. Which again, I think is a really fun concept.

You are also in the new "Hellboy" movie, what can you tell me about your character?

My character is a lord of the realm, called Lord Adam Glaren. He is a very senior figure in a sort of occult society called the Osiris Club. In the graphic novels that club, or outfit, was charged with protecting and preserving the balance of the world. So he runs this society with a group of cohorts who have certain. … well I don't want to say immortality but they certainly live longer than most people.

Were you a comic book fan growing up, or is this a whole new world that you are delving in to?
As a child, I was brought up in the Middle East and we didn't have access to television particularly — the world of satellite TV didn't exist in the late '70s. So it was what we could get our hands on, it was comic books initially and then we moved into the world of graphic novels. I wasn't massively aware of "Hellboy," although I started to become laterally aware. There's always an excitement for an actor to bring something so noticeably visual on a page to life. It's obviously hugely different from a novel or a script where you just have words — for this you have images that you can dive into. Audiences absolutely love that. It's tricky because you've got to do it justice and the fan base is so passionate, but equally in a sense, you've got to forget that to try and tell the story that you want to tell while still being imaginative and reverential at the same time.

Would you say this "Hellboy" rendition is darker than Del Toro's versions?
I think it's got the potential to be more so in a way. The team that has made it, and the director Neil Marshall, I think they didn't want to sort of sanitize it. They've been very bold, I mean it's got an R rating, which I think is exciting and it sort of frees you up to tell the story the way you want to tell it and go for it. Let's face it, it wasn't a surprise. I don't think you set out to make a movie with an R rating as a goal, but you look at the material and go well we know what we're going to do so let's go for it rather than having to go well we can't do that. With an R rating, you sort of just say, OK let's do it.

Overall what can "Hellboy" fans expect from the movie?
I think they're going to see something on a scale that Del Toro's didn't necessarily pursue. They've taken the source material and are detonating a story explosion underneath of it. Hopefully audiences will be back for more. They're going to see scale, humor and they will see David Harbour absolutely inhabit the role of Hellboy. He does a phenomenal job and I think it's going to be an absolute spectacle.

The Brazilian Court Hotel: old-Florida charm meets Palm Beach luxury

Old Florida charm meets Palm Beach luxury at The Brazilian Court Hotel, a four-star boutique property.

Perfect for a lovers' escape or even an intimate destination wedding, the hotel's ambiance drips with secret-garden-style romance. Think light Zen-like music playing in the background, mixed with the sounds of bubbling fountains throughout the meandering courtyards. It's a favorite hidden locale for celebrities because of the multiple entrances and discreet exits.

Wander through intricate courtyards, grand archways and immaculate grounds covered with tropical foliage and fragrant plants. It'll feel as if you're staying in a Palm Beach mansion, opposed to a crowded resort.

Relax on one of the elegant white chaise lounges and catch some rays in the garden. It's the ideal locale to sip a glass of rosé, dive into a good book, and spend a lazy day by the pool.

This Florida hotel, intimate and boutique, has a selection of 80 elegant rooms, including studios, one-, two- and three-bedroom suites. Appointed with lavish fabrics and mahogany millwork, rooms feature luxurious yet homey decor. And one of the best parts about this property – the hotel welcomes pampered pooches.

After a dip in the cool waters of the pool or the nearby ocean, get a full blow out and makeup application at the onsite Frédéric Fekkai Salon and Spa, offering a full range of luxury spa services. Many of the salon's top talents divide their time between New York and Palm Beach, servicing clientele in both locales. Salon and spa services include haircut and styling, coloring, manicure, pedicure, make-up application, massage, waxing, select spa treatments and select poolside and in-room beauty services.

When it's time for lunch, brunch or dinner, look to celebrity chef

Daniel Boulud's French-American restaurant located inside The Brazilian Court Hotel. One of Palm Beach's most highly acclaimed restaurants, Café Boulud's menu parallels that of an elite French bistro or popular New York eatery, with a touch of South Florida flair. Visit the lounge for cocktails, such as the white cosmopolitan (rumor has it that these are Michael Jordan's favorite) before dinner and ask to sit on the outdoor terrace, overlooking the lushly landscaped courtyard.

The hotel is conveniently situated within walking distance of both the beach and the highly coveted shops along Worth Avenue. Shop high-end brands like Tiffany & Co., Chanel and Louis Vuitton.

You'll also find local boutiques like Island Company, which exudes the ultimate coastal lifestyle with its colorful linen beachwear, whimsical accessories, delicious-smelling candles (even their custom-branded sunscreen smells good!) and vintage sunglasses. Shimmy up to the bar inside the store and enjoy a rum cocktail before you shop. A bonus: Island Company, as well as many of the shops on Worth Avenue, are also pet-friendly.

When you go...
The Brazilian Court Hotel is located at 301 Australian Avenue, Palm Beach, FL 33480. For more information and to book your reservation call 561-655-7740 or visit TheBrazilianCourt.com. KARA FRANKER

An early look at NFL win total over – unders

The Eagles have an over – under of 9.5 wins.

Matt Burke is a veteran sports journalist and the Founder and Editor in Chief of MetroBet.

GETTY IMAGES

The big-name NFL free agents have all been scooped up and it's highly unlikely that we'll see any more Odell Beckham — Antonio Brown -level blockbuster trades any time before the season starts. So, for the most part, whatever NFL teams look like right now is what they'll look like in September. Sure, the NFL Draft — which is two weeks away — will change many rosters. But the expectations of fans and bettors alike will not be altered much no matter what transpires in Nashville in late April.

Most of the big-name rookies are going to be going to bad teams, obviously. So even if the Arizona Cardinals take Oklahoma quarterback Kyler Murray with the first pick, their Super Bowl odds are not going to rise a hair. They are still going to suck.

And even if Super Bowl contenders like the Eagles have a draft that most experts think is "good," it's not going to really matter in the grand betting scheme of things. The Birds' Super Bowl odds and win total over – unders are going to be relatively what they are now.

The win total over – unders should start popping up at most sportsbooks soon, but here's an early look at what to expect. Odds here are from CG Technology, which operates seven books in Vegas.

Toronto Maple Leafs vs Boston Bruins

The Bruins have posted a 5-1 record in their last six games where they were listed as a favorite of -110 to -150 and they have gone an excellent 9-3 in their last 12 at home when listed as a favorite of those same prices above. They have also won 20 of their last 28 overall and they are a lights out 51-20 in their last 71 games at TD Garden. The Maple Leafs, on the other hand, have struggled a bit in the spot they are in here tonight as they have gone just 2-7 in their last nine playoff games and they are an awful 1-6 in their last seven games in which they have faced a team with a winning record. Throw in the fact that the Bruins are 6-1 in their last seven home games against the Leafs and we're going to lay the price with them here to get the home win in Boston on Thursday night.

Sports betting 101:
How to bet on baseball

Betting on baseball continues to grow quickly and is expected to be a $1.5 billion regulated betting market for the 2019 season. The main reason why betting on baseball is becoming popular is the vast frequency of regular-season games (2430 in MLB vs. 256 in the NFL).

There are a variety of bets available to make on a baseball game, but backing a team on the moneyline is the easiest baseball bet to understand as you simply pick one team to win.

In each MLB game there is a favorite and an underdog. The favorite is the team that the oddsmakers project to win. Their odds are represented by a minus sign followed by a three-digit number (Phillies -150). The underdog is the team the oddsmakers project to lose and their team odds are represented by a plus sign followed by a three-digit number (Mets +130).

Here's how the betting works in this example. Bet/risk $150 on Phillies (the favorite) to win $100 or bet/risk $100 on the Mets (the underdog) to win $130.

GETTY IMAGES

The sportsbook oddsmaker uses a variety of data and stats to set the line, however baseball odds are predominately determined by the starting pitchers.

For instance, when a pitcher like the Phillies' Aaron Nola (with a record of 17-6 in the 2018 season) is the starting pitcher, the Phillies will most often be the favorite.

Enjoy this baseball season and swing by your favorite sportsbook on the way to the ballpark to bet on your favorite team ... and pitcher.

2019 Masters Tournament betting preview

This year's Masters will be the most wagered on golf event ever.

MATT YOUMANS

Matt Youmans is VSiN's Senior Editor. He spent 16 years at the Las Vegas Review-Journal as a sports betting columnist before joining VSiN.

A perfect storm is set to hit Augusta, Georgia, where Tiger Woods and a wave of elite talent from the next generation will tee it up in a Masters that is forecast to set a wagering record for a golf major.

More than a decade has passed, and 42 majors have been contested since Tiger last won one. But he's expected to be in contention this week along with Rory McIlroy and Dustin Johnson, who are the betting favorites despite never winning a green jacket.

William Hill sportsbook director Nick Bogdanovich said the biggest bet to cross his computer screen so far was $7,000 on Johnson at 11/1 odds. Westgate SuperBook golf oddsmaker Jeff Sherman topped that by taking a $10,000 bet on Woods at 12/1.

"The money bet on this thing is going to be crazy when it's all said and done," Bogdanovich said. "The handle is just insane. Sick numbers.

"Tiger is contending, Rory is in top form and so many other guys can win it. The economy is good and sports betting is at an all-time high. It's creating a tsunami of betting on this tournament."

GETTY IMAGES

JUSTIN ROSE (12/1): Two years ago, Rose squandered a back-nine lead on Sunday and lost a playoff to Sergio Garcia. Rose has two runner-up finishes at Augusta, where course history is a primary reference point for handicappers. He landed in the top 15 in each of his past five Masters appearances. The world's No. 1-ranked player has the track record and the putting stats to finally shed the bridesmaid label.

TIGER WOODS (14/1): On the optimistic side of things, Woods has four Masters wins among 13 Top-10 finishes. On the downside, he's 43 and has not won here since 2005. But his driving distance remains competitive with the longest hitters and his short game can be phenomenal. He's healthy, and he's dangerous when healthy. McIlroy, Woods and Johnson are leading the money count at William Hill books.

RICKIE FOWLER (16/1): The ticket count leader at William Hill books this week is Fowler, who never has won a major. He fired a final-round 67 last year to finish 14 under par, one stroke behind Patrick Reed. Fowler is immensely talented yet has trouble closing the deal. He's one of the most popular players on the PGA Tour, and Reed might be the most unpopular. Tommy Fleetwood, Fowler and Woods lead the Westgate's ticket count.

Long shots to watch: Bubba Watson (25/1), Hideki Matsuyama (30/1), Adam Scott (40/1), Xander Schauffele (40/1), Kevin Kisner (60/1), Gary Woodland (60/1), Charley Hoffman (80/1).

NHL playoffs Day 2 betting previews

The Stanley Cup playoffs are cranking up as after a scintillating first night, Day 2 should provide plenty of fireworks as well.

HURRICANES VS. CAPITALS

No one wanted to see the Hurricanes in the first round and the defending Cup champions drew the short straw. The Capitals can still put the puck in the net as they are averaging 3.02 goals per 60 minutes compared to the Hurricanes, who average 2.42 goals per 60.

The Hurricanes were 46-36 against the spread and were 22-19 on the road this season. Meanwhile the Caps were 48-34 ATS and 24-17 at home.

Washington showed last season that it can fall behind in early playoff series' and with Carolina a solid road team we like the dogs tonight.

The play: Hurricanes +100

AVALANCHE VS. FLAMES

The Flames were one of the surprise teams in the NHL this season along with the Islanders and in front of a raucous Calgary crowd on Thursday night in Game 1 they should get the job done. Calgary went 3-0 against Colorado this season and led the Western Conference in team scoring for most of the season.

Colorado allowed 21 more goals than the Flames did this season and their goaltender, Philipp Grubauer, was actually removed from the Capitals lineup last year in the first round of the playoffs as he lost his starting gig. History could repeat itself this April.

The play: Flames -175

Dallas Keuchel still

The former Cy Young Award winner could bring a boost to the club's rotation.

JOE PANTORNO

Dallas Keuchel remains one of the top free agents available. GETTY IMAGES

Two weeks into Major League Baseball's 2019 regular season and former American League Cy Young Award winner Dallas Keuchel still remains unsigned. The 31-year-old headlines a remaining free-agent class that also includes closer Craig Kimbrel, the league's save leader since 2010.

Keuchel — along with his agent Scott Boras — has been unwilling to budge from his offseason demands of a five-year deal, which is likely the main reason as to why he still is on the market.

It's quite an investment for a team to make considering Keuchel has been inconsistent over the past five years since he's risen to prominence.

Since his Cy Young campaign in 2015 when he went 20-8 with a 2.48 ERA, Keuchel has had one season with a sub-3.00 ERA and two over 3.70, including 2016 when he posted a 4.55 ERA.

Injuries have played their fair share during those inconsistencies as he's battled shoulder and neck issues; another reason as to why teams would be cautious of giving him a contract until his age 36 season.

Regardless of those reservations, a number of teams around the league would benefit from picking up a talent like his.

Among eight teams listed as rosters that would benefit the most from picking up the out there for needy Phils

GETTY IMAGES

former Houston Astro, MLB.com's Mark Feinsand listed the Phillies as a prime suitor.

Behind ace Aaron Nola, who finished third in the National League Cy Young Award voting last year, the Phillies' starting rotation is in trouble.

Even Nola has been off this season after he got rocked for a combined 10 runs in his last two starts against the Nationals.

While he's expected to regain last year's form, a ton of question marks surround the rest of the rotation.

The Phillies are hoping Jake Arrieta can continue building off a strong start to the season. Despite allowing a pair of home runs to the Minnesota Twins in a loss last week, he's sporting a cool 2.77 ERA in 13 innings of work this season.

Should he keep this up, then the Phillies will have the one-two punch they so desperately wanted when they originally signed Arrieta prior to last season. However, there's a long way to go before that notion can be secured.

Behind Arrieta is where things get even shakier as Zach Eflin, Nick Pivetta, and Vince Velasquez have yet to show consistent success at the major-league level.

Eflin's start to the season has been promising as he's only allowed a single run in 12 innings this season.

Velasquez performed admirably in his lone start, allowing two runs in five innings of work. Yet Pivetta has struggled with seven earned runs in his first 9.2 innings of the year.

There are even more issues ahead considering Eflin and Vasquez could be on an innings limit in 2019.

Not only does Keuchel provide depth, but he also provides the promise of an impressive trio at the top of Philadelphia's rotation should Arrieta join Nola as top-tier National League pitchers.

The major roadblock, however, has been the Phillies' stubbornness as they reportedly are only interested in giving Keuchel a one-year deal.

What options will Flyers have with 11th pick?

There will still be some talented forwards available outside the top-10.

JOE PANTORNO
joseph.pantorno@metro.us

Arthur Kaliyev is among the prospects available for the Flyers at the 2019 NHL Draft. GETTY IMAGES

Tuesday night's draft lottery wasn't necessarily a successful one for the Flyers.

With the Chicago Blackhawks jumping up from 12th to third, the Flyers came away with the No. 11 pick of the 2019 NHL Draft, one spot down from what was expected.

It's not an enormous difference, but the Flyers sit outside the top-10 while seeing a pair of Metropolitan Division opponents — and geographical rivals — in the New Jersey Devils and New York Rangers jump up into the top-three.

The Devils will pick first, with the prize being Jack Hughes, while the Rangers have an open path to pick up Kaapo Kakko.

For the Flyers, the draft provides a chance to address some major team needs with an eye on the future.

Draft picks in Philadelphia's range rarely see NHL time the season after being selected, but new general manager Chuck Fletcher is in the midst of a pseudo-rebuild as he looks ahead to his first full season at the helm.

The Flyers' largest needs at the draft will be at the forward positions as depth at center and on the wings is a must for a team that is coming off its worst season in over a decade.

While this is one of the deeper drafts, the Flyers will likely miss out on the very top forward prospects this season, whether it's Vasily Podolzkin, Dylan Cozens, Alex Turcotte, or Trevor Zegras.

That being said, there is still an opportunity to snag a promising youngster to add to the Flyers' talent pool.

At the center spot, Kirby Dach of the WHL's Saskatoon Blades and Peyton Krebs of the Kootenay Ice could be at the top of Fletcher's wish list.

Dach recorded 73 points (25 goals, 48 assists) in 62 games while Krebs had 68 points in 64 games.

On the wings, the Flyers will have a chance to pick up the likes of Matthew Boldy of the US National Development Team, his teammate Cole Caufield, and Arthur Kaliyev of the OHL's Hamilton Bulldogs.

Caufield is considered by many to be the best sniper of the draft, but his small stature is a reason why he'll go in the middle of the first round. Boldy is more of a power forward that will be able to score from the dirty areas.

Kaliyev might be the most intriguing prospect of them all as he became one of just five 17-year-olds to score 50 or more goals in an OHL season. If it's any indication of his future, it's a great sign as the other four to pull off such a feat were John Tavares, Steven Stamkos, Jeff Skinner, and Alex DeBrincat.
